FOREWORD.

THE series offered in the following pages — a continuation of the First Part of the remarkable Del Valle collection recently sold, is notable because of the thoroughly Spanish character of the coins and medals, dating from the earliest days of Peninsular history, which it contains. Not one of the Roman colonies in Europe had more of romance in its annals than is found in Iberia; and the care and skill with which this cabinet was gathered, embracing coins that cover a period of nearly twenty centuries, give it more than ordinary interest. The catalogue opens with a gold coin of Hadrian, one of the few Roman Emperors who personally visited Spain, and displays the entire history of that people which, from a subject colony, developed into an independent and powerful realm, — long the proudest and richest kingdom in the civilized world — with colonies of its own, in lands unknown to its ancient conquerors which its ships had found beyond the sea, over all of which it held for centuries an almost undisputed sway, and the last of which it has recently so reluctantly yielded.

The varying stages of art in engraving, and the progress shown in striking these coins, offer opportunities for study that are rarely found. A thought must be given to the several classes of silver, base and copper coinage and their distinctive characteristics, as well as to their intrinsic value and purchasing power, as compared with the coinages of to-day. It may be said that from the earliest times gold alone has shown unvarying strength; all other metals have been but tokens of pledges and promises.

Here will be found not only a great variety of early Roman coins bearing on Spanish history, which date from the dawn of the Christian era, but the rare and curious pieces of the Celtiberians, descendants of the Celtic tribes who first crossed the Pyrenees, and who were not brought into complete subjection to the Imperial power for a century after the conquest of Gaul by Julius Cæsar. There are a few dirhems commemorative of the Moorish Caliphs of Granada, recalling Irving's brilliant story; medieval coins revealing the extensive sway of Spanish princes over Naples and Sicily and Milan, won from the ruins of the fallen empire of their ancient masters; with the more familiar devices of Castile and Leon, of Aragon and Seville, under the Bourbons. To these are added the products of the earliest Colonial Mints in Mexico and South America. The collection is a veritable numismatic chronicle of Spain and her various rulers for sixty generations. Its connection with American history gives it a peculiar interest to American collectors, especially when we remember how largely the circulating medium in the United States for the first half century after its independence was Spanish silver. Rarely — we believe never — before, have our collectors had such an opportunity for competing on these lines, which represent so many chapters in history, and which may well be called "monuments of their periods."

In reference to the condition of the pieces catalogued, the opening remark in the Foreword of Part I is repeated: —

A large number of the silver pieces in this collection have become darkened on one side — a few on both obverse and reverse — from long exposure, and others have marks of sulphur from rubber bands, some slightly, others more pronouncedly, but none, I believe, positively bad or irreclaimable. With these remarks prefaced, the condition is given without further reference to this particular.

HISPANIA. ROMANO-IBERIAN AND LATIN CURRENCY.

The collection of Celtiberian coins here assembled I believe to be the most extensive that has ever been offered in America. Most of the bronze pieces compare but poorly in execution with the Greek and Roman series, which cover much of the same period. Specimens perfectly struck and in high preservation are rare. In size they closely follow the Roman First and Second bronze, with a limited number of the Third or small pieces.

- 920 431 Constructed of mahogany, with black walnut trimmings. Height 55 in., depth 19 in., breadth 49 in.; 90 drawers, in two tiers. Double doors, with lock and key. The feet or rests are broken, also some of the trimmings, but the rest of the cabinet is in good condition. I judge an outlay of $10 would put the whole in good order. Serviceable for a dealer or a large collection. Packing will be extra, and probably cost $2.50. 1
- 432 Coin Holders. Constructed of thick pasteboard, with holes for various sizes of coins. They are surfaced with green enameled paper, and are inscribed with brief descriptions in ink. A few are in wood and match the others well. Size  $1\frac{7}{8}$  in. square (or about). A little ingenuity would doubtless restore all for use again. 1600
- 433 Another lot of 256, precisely as last. Also 274 of varying larger sizes, up to  $3\frac{3}{8}$  in. square, chiefly suitable for medals. 530
